The financial innovations in the wake of recent crises have unquestionably transformed ways financial issues are addressed by financial practitioners and scholars. Over the past three year, there is a growing literature on Financial Technology (FinTech) and sustainable finance, ranging from characterizations of new technologies and new social and environmental standards to how these tools affect financing and investing behavior.

The objective of the workshop « The Financial Industry and the Crisis: The Role of Innovation » organized by ESC Clermont BS is to present theoretical and empirical academic research on Financial Technology and ESG & Sustainable Finance.

The committee welcomes studies that provide forward-thinking insights into current research. Specific topics can include, but are not limited, financial technology (e.g., FinTech's funding and development, financial inclusion, blockchain, cryptocurrency, non-fungible token, machine learning, and artificial intelligence), ESG & Sustainable finance (e.g., Corporate responsibility, climate finance, green banking and accounting, responsible investment, green and social bonds, greenwashing) as well as the interplay of these topics with corporate governance and financial regulation.

The workshop seeks excellent research papers in all fields of FinTech, ESG & Sustainable finance.
We welcome notably papers that built on recent data and surveys.

All submissions will be single-blind peer reviewed.
Accepted papers will be discussed following presentation by a participant scholar.

BEST PAPER AWARDS:

The "Best Paper Awards" will be given to the selected studies by the scientific committee and workshop chairs among the presented papers. In consultation with the Editors-in-Chief of Bankers, Markets, and Investors (BMI), authors of the two selected papers (FinTech, ESG & Sustainable Finance) will be invited to submit their manuscripts to a regular issue of the journal with fast-track review.
